

Alopecia: The Complete Guide On Treatments and Remedies: Stop Hair Loss In Men

Alopecia is actually a very common disease that affects children, as well as men and women. There are a number of causes of alopecia. These causes range from the medical; such as chemotherapy, the psychological, such as disorders wherein people pull out their own hair, to the cosmetics where individuals get hairstyles such as braids that are just way too tight and that damages the follicles of the hair. There are different forms of alopecia. There is alopecia areata which is the one that presents with bald patches that may be small or large and can be left alone to correct itself eventually. There is also the type of alopecia that causes complete hair loss on the head but also on other places on the body such as the eyebrows. There is also alopecia that is specific to males, this is called Androgenetic Alopecia. Men with alopecia usually lose their hairline and it recedes until it goes way back to form a horseshoe on the top of their heads. They are more likely than women to lose all their hair from alopecia. There are medical as well as natural treatments and home remedies for the different types of alopecia. However, the main treatment is usually observation wherein it is watched to see if the hair will grow back in by itself. Observation is very important since many of the treatments for this disease have serious side effects. As such, if you can deal with the temporary hair loss by wearing a wig, then it is advisable that you do so instead of getting treatments that come with some serious side effects.
