Candida Hofer's photographs. details for contempt contempt. Contempt commits are silent at first sight of the all human presence In a masterly, almost magical way, they bear witness to the strength of architecture and the magnificence of painted or sculpted decoration, and despite (or perhaps because of) the absence of the public, they capture the basic purpose of cultural institutions, such as museums, open houses and libraries, which have been her favourite theme for some ten years. Here Hofer turns her attention to the vast universe of the Louvre. This series of photographs allows her to examine one of the key elements in the history of the Louvre and a specific feature of museum architecture: the gallery. The changing c...
